*Dream fluently, still brothers, who when young
Took with your mother's milk the mother tongue,*

*In which pure matrix, joining world and mind,
You strove to leave some line of verse behind*

*Like still fresh tracks across a field of snow,
Not reckoning that all could melt and go.*

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The ongoing efforts to excavate and understand Poggio Civitate benefit from generations of scholars whose remarkable work allows us to see the site with such nuance and detail. Some of the materials discussed here were recovered during the very first days of excavation in 1966 under the direction of Kyle Meredith Phillips Jr. Other examples were recovered during the years when directorship of the site passed to Phillips' student and successor, Erik Nielsen. While our methods of excavation and data collection have evolved over the years, the essential quality of their work creates a remarkable and robust foundation for everything that follows in their considerable footsteps.

From the inception of excavation, work at the site has benefited from the generous support and assistance of the Soprintendenza Archeologia of Florence and now also the provinces of Siena, Grosseto and Arezzo. Their advice, oversight and insight offered to those working at Poggio Civitate from generations of talented and tireless archaeologists, now led by Soprintendente Dott. Andrea Pessina and Dott. Jacopo Tabolli, has been greatly valued.

Excavation over five decades has forged deep friendships between the project and the people of the Comune of Murlo. Sindaco Fabiola Parenti is the latest in a long line of thoughtful and encouraging custodians of this relationship. The project also acknowledges the generosity and support of the Rubegni family for their patience and kindness in housing the project for many years.

The authors wish to thank the hundreds of students and scholars whose efforts and contributions provide the basis of evidence from which everything we understand about the site flows. Jason Bauer, Kate Kriendler, Eoin O'Donoghue, Teresa Huntsman, Steve Miller, Sarah Kansa and Eric Kansa are joined by literally scores of others whose unfailing energy, fellowship, and support make our work possible.

We also express our sincere gratitude to Elizabeth Reich for her assistance with the editorial work on this volume. Several excavation photographers contributed the images used to illustrate this work. We thank Hope Green, Daniel Shisler, Austin Madrid, Jean Blackburn and especially Grayson Lauffenburger for lending their time and talent to the project. Additionally, we are deeply grateful to Lisa Marie Smith for her tireless efforts in the administration of the Department of Classics and her assistance in the preparation of this work.

Finally, we wish to acknowledge Dean Julie Hayes and the College of Humanities and Fine Arts at the University of Massachusetts Amherst for supporting excavation and research at Poggio Civitate.
